*Medical silicone refers to types of silicone that have been tested for their properties / purity for the manufacture of medical devices and have been classified as harmless - Conversely, this does not necessarily mean that the products made from it must be medical devices - With the introduction of the new Medical Device Regulation (MDR), the requirements will be increased - MDR is a new regulation for medical devices, MDR), the requirements have been increased - Previously, anyone who processed a silicone classified as safe could claim that their product was made of medical silicone - Now the end product, i.e. the silicone molded part itself, must also be tested in accordance with ISO 10993-5 / 10993-10 and classified as safe so that this statement continues to be valid. Our products with the addition "medical silicone" have been tested in accordance with ISO 10993-5 / 10993-10 and found to be safe.
